Comoro History by Mzee Hinya (Higna) of Mitsamioulli, Ngazija A
This is the second of two spools, the first was unfortunately spoilt. The author intended to send further instalments with a view to their translation and publication in Swahili but he died at a great age in Sept. 1967. If this part is found interesting the first part can probably be recovered.

Vugo na Mashairi
Vugo ni ngoma ya zamani sana ambayo yapendekeza sana kwa wanawake nayo huchezwa katika maarusi zaidi sana. Hutezwa katika kupeleka fedha za arusi ama kupeleka nguo za arusi kutoka nyumba ya bwana kupeleka kwa Biarusi. Na wanawake huwa na pembe na kipande mkononi wakuliya, hushika pembe na wa kushoto kushika kipande wakizipiga pembe kufuatisha mshindo wa ngoma na zumari, na mmoja kati ya hao huwa akitoa mashairi yakutumbuiza na mashairi ya kuitikia na hapo utaona mashairi yalotungwa katika vugo hili nimashairi ya kutowa shukurani kwa Mwenyeezimngu na kutaja habari ya elimu. Haya ndio madhimuni ya mtungaji.

ALPHABETICAL LIST OF SWAHILI MANUSCRIPTS BY TITLES AND FIRST LINES

PRINTED IN THE NETHERLANDS

INTRODUCTION

Swahili literature considering the importance and interest of the language and the amount of research to be done, has been sadly neglected both as regards the bibliography of published work and the collection and listing of unpublished work.

The work of Marcel van Spaandonck [1] supplemented by that of Alberto Mioni [2] are attempts to cover the former and this catalogue is an attempt to approach the latter problem. It too is incomplete and by no means free from error and there is the same justification for publishing it in a preliminary form. Apart from the obvious fact that no such list can ever be complete, because while it is in the press further study is going on, to wait until every item can be completely and accurately described means to wait until the research has been completed which the publication of the catalogue is intended to stimulate and so defeats its own object. This is to indicate the magnitude of the task to be undertaken and to encourage others to make corrections and to fill gaps.

Mioni (p. 486) says that van Spaandonck "aurait pu donner la référence de ceux qui se trouvent dans les grandes bibliothèques et qui sont cités dans les catalogues et fichiers, ou mentionnés par les auteurs qui sont édité ces textes".

It is obvious that a catalogue of all such manuscripts would be of very great value; but to make it requires time and money that have not yet been made available. The catalogue here presented is that of a single collection only; but that the biggest in the world. Indeed there are few important known works of which copies are not to be found here, although of some the oldest or the best copy may be in another collection.

We must thank first of all the Rockefeller Foundation for making the collection possible, and secondly the Governments of Tanzania, Kenya and the Comores from which we received all possible cooperation.

To thank all the individuals who assisted us is impossible. The list would be so long that it would be meaningless and many of our most valuable assistants would be embarrassed if mentioned by name. Many of them were learned and cultured ladies of the Coast, who were ready to give into the care of my wife their most highly valued manuscripts. Though usually they did not wish to part with them they were most willing to allow them to be poses and in Arabic. Such manuscripts as are to be found in Swahili in Arabic script are imported from further north or copied locally from such copies.

In the Comoro islands the position is very different and is confused by the use of the word "Swahili" in colloquial French to include languages which in English are not considered to be Swahili at all.[1] Using the word in its English sense the Comoros are not strictly in the Swahili speaking world. There is a large Swahili speaking community of Zanzibaris and most members of the aristocracy know it well; but it is no more the language of the islands than is French, which is known to quite as large a number of persons.

The interest of the Comoro islands is the different order in which the uses of literacy seem to have grown up. We know that Islam and therefore literacy in Arabic reached the Comoros and Madagascar not much later than the mainland. It would appear that the greater sophistication of the people of Madagascar resulted in the very much more rapid adaptation of the script to the local languages and the emergence of a large amount of non-Muslim literature in Malagasy.

The Comoro islands are virtually 100 per cent Muslim; but it is probably from Madagascar that they imported the idea of using Arabic script for their own languages, Ngazija. Hence, unlike the situation on the mainland coast, the use of writing for personal correspendence is so widespread that the Post Office has to be able to cope with Arabic script, as it does not on the mainland, and public notices are displayed either in Ngazija in Arabic script or in French; but seldom in Ngazija in Roman script. On the other hand official and other serious uses have developed so late that there is little such work written in Ngazija. We collected four historical documents in Grande Comore of which one was in French and one in Arabic, both some seventy years old, and two were in Ngazija, recently written by authors who, though very old, were still alive at the time of our visit.

Our aim being the collection of pre-European material we confined ourselves in all areas visited almost entirely to Swahili in Arabic script. We collected little in other languages, or in Swahili in Roman script; because the use of Roman implies European influence, while a document written in 1967 in Arabic script may often be described as pre-European in that it has little or no European influence. We also collected a certain amount in Arabic, if we had reason to believe that the material was of interest, although my knowledge of the Arabic language is insufficient for me to be a good judge of such material.

photographed and it will be found that the most valuable part of the collection consists of manuscripts of which the originals are still in the hands of the original owners, but of which the College now has photocopies. We cannot omit the names of a few whose help was outstanding and from whom we continue to receive help after our departure. We give them in chronological order. At Lindi, Mr. B. A. Mikidadi, at Pande Mr. Said Mohammed Alley, at Lamu Mr. Ahmad Sheikh Nabahany and his grandmother Amina Mohammed Sheikh. At Lamu also Mrs. Zaharia Maimun set herself to collect on our behalf and was indefatigable, obtaining manuscripts not only from Lamu, but from Pate Island also. And later we have to thank Mr. Aboud Said Saleh of Moroni, Grande Comore and Mr. L. W. Hamisi Kitumboy of Bagamoyo.

Pre-European literacy south of the Sahara is confined to a very few languages. There are the writings of Christians in Ethiopia and of Muslims in the countries to which Islam penetrated.

There is evidence that literacy came to the East African coast very soon after the Hijra; but that it was at first a hieratic art confined to religious works in he Arabic language. Later—often much later—its uses were enlarged, and it should be noted that to use literacy for a new purpose is almost as great a cultural step as the original introduction of literacy itself.

The date of the earliest writing in Swahili in Arabic script is not known. The earliest known manuscript written in Swahili is dated 1724 and was recently found in Goa by Dr. Edward Alpers. It may be that Swahili was not written at all much before the year 1700 and then for some time in restricted uses and in a restricted area. This does not mean that the works then committed to writing were necessarily then composed. Some of them are clearly histories, stories and poems that had come down by oral tradition from a much earlier date or that had previously been written in Arabic. The material to be found consists of religious works of little general interest, of historical works, of poetry, and of such ephemera as are of interest solely because of their antiquity or provenance, which may throw light on history and especially on social history. But even within this confined area the general use of writing seems to be hardly older than the nineteenth century. The area itself stretches from the Northern boundary of the Swahili speaking world, about Mogadishu in Southern Somalia, as far South as Kilwa, including the islands of Pemba, Zanzibar and Mafia, but no further. In Lindi, for example, the influence of Islam and therefore of literacy seems to have been small until so recently that the culture characterized by the use of Arabic script was there inhibited by the introduction by the Germans of Roman script. Arabic script is used; but mainly for purely religious pur-

More than a hundred years ago Ludwig Krapf discovered the existence of Swahili literature; but he was not interested in collecting it. After him came a series of scholars, many of them of very high quality, who were content to make use of what came to their hands, and to leave it to later scholars to pick up more material. In doing this they were perfectly justified. There is no point in making a collection as complete as possible, unless there is time and money to do something about it or there is danger of its perishing if it is not collected and preserved. From 1930, when I began to take an interest in the subject, until after the war, I was content to do the same. I did little more than collect one manuscript of an unedited poem at a time and not look for another until I had finished with it. Not until about 1953 did I begin to realize that there was serious danger of this culture being largely lost to posterity if urgent steps were not taken to preserve it. The younger generation of Africans is, as it should be, looking forward rather than back. It wants to be modern and "with it", but, if history tells us anything at all it is that after a period of surge and change like the present comes a period of nostalgia and love of things past. The grandchildren of the present generation will be sorry if all the records of their past have perished. My aim therefore was to preserve for the future as much as possible of this fascinating culture, so that the descendants of its own creators might after my death have material to work upon and in which they could take local pride.

Furthermore no literature ever sprang complete into the world. Having no indigenous origins, the literatures of Africa are drawing their inspiration from oral tradition or from the literatures of English, French and Portuguese. Of all the many Bantu languages only Swahili has its own pre-European native literature and it would be tragic if the break between ancient and modern were so complete that writers of modern Swahili literature were to draw nothing from their own ancestors. The break is already so severe that the great majority of Swahili speakers educated in the western sense do not even know of the existence of their own past literature and frequently when working on a manuscript in Arabic script I have found it hard to convince an African undergraduate that I am reading Swahili and not Arabic. The break is not complete because many poets of to-day have their feet firmly planted in the old culture; but few prose writers have any links with it.

About this time then, I set myself to try to find ways of making a systematic collection for preservation. I was already acquainted with the contents of the main collections already made, having had access to that at the School of Oriental and African Studies in London and having myself catalogued that in the Statsbibliothek in Berlin (although whether after the war it still exists I do not know). I began to envisage the formation of a corpus of Swahili literature available to all interested students, and to lay the foundation for such a collection I presented to the Interterritorial Languages Committee the few manuscripts in my possession. I hoped that other private collectors might do the same or at least let the Committee have photo copies; Support of this sort came from the late Sheikh Sir Mbarak Ali Hinawy, K.B.E. who let me photograph some of his most valuable manuscripts, and later from his family, who have loaned a very valuable collection; Miss Margaret Bryan's valuable collection had been given earlier to the committee.

My trip to Kilwa and Mafia in 1958 with my wife produced a few manuscripts and enabled me to draw more confident attention to the urgency of the need of collection.[1]

In 1960 the History Sub-committee of the Swahili committee was formed under the chairmanship of Sheikh Mbarak and with Sheikh Hyder Mohamed el Kindy as its secretary and it did excellent work during the short period of its existence. At last in 1962 the first systematic attempt to collect and preserve the written records was begun. A generous grant from the Gulbenkian foundation enabled Dr. Jan Knappert to concentrate on the work and he laid the foundations of a comprehensive collection, drawn mainly from the Mombasa area. By the time of his departure the collection, now lodged in the Office of the Swahili Committee in Dar es Salaam, was the largest and best collection of Swahili literature in the world. Dr. Knappert's work changed the collection from a small random number to a substantial and valuable mass of material. I was still not satisfied. I felt that the search should be extended over the whole Swahili speaking world.

In May 1965 I accepted an appointment made possible by the generosity of the Rockefeller Foundation as Honorary Research Fellow of the University College Dar es Salaan, Tanzania, my duties being "the collection of manuscripts of literary, linguistic and historical interest of the Swahili speaking world and the editing, translation, cataloguing and publishing of such material."

It is obvious that in my terms of reference priority had to be given to collection, without which there can be no editing, translation or publishing The other activities are too big a task for any one person, and I have largely left them to be done, by myself when I am too old to travel further, and by others after me. It is however clearly my duty to leave behind a catalogue of sufficient detail for others to be able to use the collection and to make arrangements for its preservation now that it is out of my hands.

In addition we had the use of a tape recorder; but we did not make a great deal of use of it, because we felt that our primary work was the collection of written records. From the point of view of the preservation and explanation of the culture this was a mistake. Swahili poetry is written or composed to be sung or chanted and the composer has in his mind the musical scheme as well as the verse metre and in order to understand the verse forms it is necessary to have access to manuscripts and tapes of the same pieces so that they may be compared.[1] A representative collection of tapes has been begun by Mr Ahmad Sheikh Nabhany and his wife Mrs Khadija (see Tapes 193-327). This collection is being analysed and transcribed by them and others and it is hoped that in due course this will lead to the production for the first time of a comprehensive analysis of Swahili verse forms.

INSTRUCTIONS FOR THE USE OF THE CATALOGUE

The catalogue is arranged as follows:

PART ONE
Serial lists

1. Swahili manuscripts (Nos 1 sqq.)

Each entry gives, so far as it is known:

a) The serial number.
Users of previous lists should be warned that some numbers have been changed. The withdrawal of all manuscripts other than Swahili to the general and Arabic lists has left vacant numbers, which have been reused, largely by dividing collections of papers previously listed under single numbers and giving separate numbers to the parts.

b) The number of pages.
This must be treated as approximate only. It will often be found to include a few pages at the beginning and end, containing totally irrelevant material. The pages are often numbered and then reference is made to the written numbers; but these may not be consecutive. When a manuscript is written in a book with page numbers printed in the European style, if Arabic script is used, the numbers will be in reverse order.

c) The dimensions of the paper.

d) The date of the manuscript, either as given in it, or as known for some other reason.

e) The word "Film" means that the original manuscript is still in private hands and that the college possesses only a photocopy.

f) Obt. from: the person from whom the manuscript was obtained, the place and the date of acquisition.

g) "Copyright" means that copies cannot be supplied without the permission of the owner. This does not mean that in the absence of this warning it may be assumed that the work is free of copyright and users must be themselves responsible for ascertaining the position. The college can accept no responsibility. It should, however, be noted that the manuscripts of the Hinawy Loan Collection may be freely used, provided that in any published work suitable acknowledgment is made. This generous gesture has recently been made by the heirs of the late Sir Mbarak Ali Hinawy K.B.E.

h) Short title, sufficient for reference to Part II.

i) The script: This is usually Arabic (A) or Roman (R).

N.B. Manuscripts are listed as Swahili if they are in or about Swahili. Bilingual and interlinear works are listed as Swahili; but substantial parts of manuscripts, wholly in Arabic, are listed at the beginning of the Arabic Section (Part I.2).

2. Arabic manuscripts (Nos 2501 sqq.)
Similarly arranged. This section is largely the work of Mr M. R. Alidina.

3. Serial list of Tapes (Nos 1 sqq.)

Each entry gives, so far as it is known:

a) The serial number.

b) The speed in cm/sec.; the place and date of collection and the name of the collector.

c) Sp. The name of the speaker or singer.

d) The Title.

N.B. a), b), and sometimes c) may refer to more than one title.

Part TWO

1. Alphabetical list of Swahili manuscripts and tapes by titles and first lines.
It has been thought wise to make a single list of these, because of many pieces the first line has virtually become the title.

Each entry gives, so far as it is known:

a) The title (in bold).

b) The first line (in italics).
If a piece is known by more than one title, the details are given under the title most commonly used. If a piece has no title the details are given under the first line.

c) The author.
This is often a doubtful attribution.

d) The "code". This consists of three numbers—the number of syllables to the line, the number of lines to the verse and the number of verses, followed by the syllable or word recurring at the end of every verse. The number of verses is often approximate only because of the difference between manuscripts and versions.

e) References to published editions.

f) References to manuscripts and tapes.

Very occasionally reference is made to manuscripts not in the possession of the college; but no attempt has been made to include complete lists from other collections. There are also occasional references to pieces of which the college possesses no manuscript.

g) Notes. These, when a piece is represented in the Nabhany collection of tapes, include Mr Nabhany's notes, unless a piece is so well known and written up that these are felt to be unnecessary.

2. List of fragments and pieces of which, pending further study, no adequate description can yet be given.

3. List of Swahili prose works roughly classified. The details, so far as they are known, will be found in Part I.

N.B. No attempt has been made to make similar lists for Arabic manuscripts. The list is short and all that is know at present is to be found in Part I. Some of them may be of historical or literary interest; but many were acquired solely for their interest as specimens of paper, handwriting etc. or for their age.
